Case Study

Analyzing the Profitability of a Major Product Line for a Small Manufacturer

A fabricator was planning to abandon a product line that represented 40% of his business because he thought it was unprofitable. SLD performed an analysis of the product and determined that it was indeed unprofitable, then calculated the price change needed to make it profitable. The recommended price increase was readily accepted by the fabricator's customers. The fabricator didn't lose a single customer, didn't have to abandon the product line, and the product is now very profitable.
